Neighborhoods with the Most Existing Listings

- Areas with many existing rentals may have more competition for guest bookings.
- Long Beach had the most listings (1,238), followed by Venice (850), Hollywood (812), and Santa Monica (790).
- The firm should check occupancy rates to see how often these rentals are booked and whether there's enough demand for more properties.

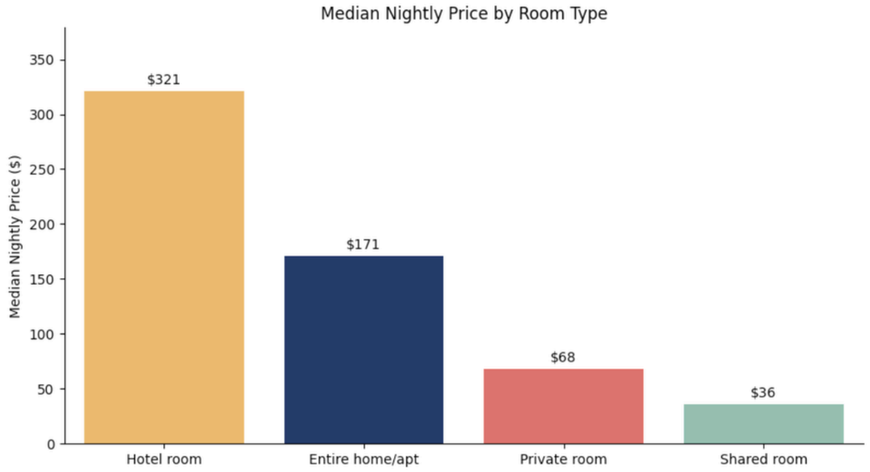

Larger Properties Tend to Have Higher Nightly Prices

- Properties with more bedrooms generally had higher nightly prices.
- Properties that can host more guests also generally had higher nightly prices.
- Larger properties may potentially bring in more income per booking

- Airbnb guests can book an entire home, a private room, a shared room, or a hotel room.
- Hotel rooms had the highest median nightly price ($321), followed by entire homes and apartments ($171), private rooms ($68), and shared rooms ($36)
- Entire homes may earn more per booking, but higher property costs could affect profits.

Strategic Recommendations

- Look into potential investments in Venice and Santa Monica, since nightly prices are relatively high. Long Beach may also be worth considering depending on costs and competition.
- Consider entire homes with multiple bedrooms, since they can accommodate larger groups and generally charge higher nightly rates.
- Check occupancy rates, property costs, and local rental regulations before making any investment decisions.
